Real Estate Board Launches Comprehensive New Website

September 27, 2007

Searching for a home or apartment in New York may have just gotten a little easier, thanks to a free website launched Thursday by the Real Estate Board of New York.

The agency launched residential-nyc.com, which lists condos, co-ops, and apartments from brokers throughout the city. The site uses Google earth technology so home buyers or renters can pinpoint openings that meet their location and price range.

"There is nothing more accurate than our website," said Real Estate Board of New York President Steven Spinola. "We are taking it from our residential listing service, which is what the brokers use, and it just a wonderful one-stop experience for the consumers and that's why the brokers have done it."

The site also features information on specific neighborhoods, along with e-mail alerts, and a mortgage calculator.
